

Mayas-Incas-Aztecs and Their Secrets

by Josef Kemény, 19-03-2010

A short summary of the caption above: many people ask themselves why these three realms suddenly appeared and disappeared together with their civilisations. What was behind this “Alpha and Omega civilisation”?

Each foundation of a society has its own motivation. If you know about the thread from the beginning, it will be easier to find the answers to various global events, as for example the caption above.

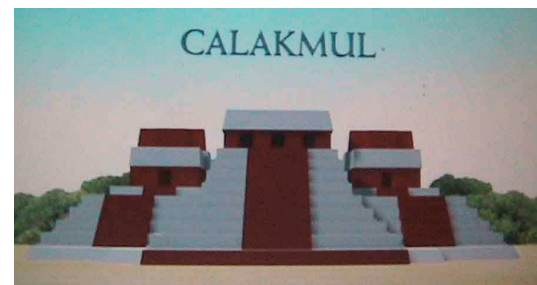

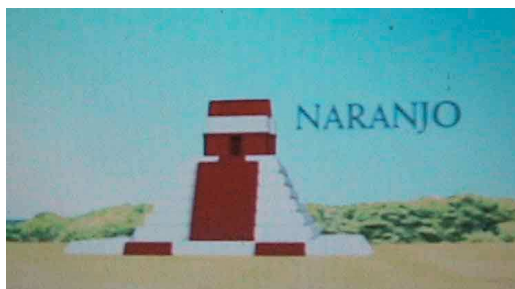

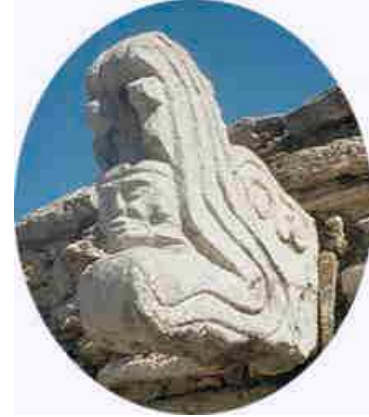

The Maya Civilisation (around AD 100-1541)
 Deity: Kukulcan
 The Feathered Serpent
 Religion: Sun Worshipping
 Aton/Nemesis

If we study material from the Maya civilisation we find the assignment given to the Maya people by the deity Kukulcan. The most important parts of the assignment were the Maya calendar, the Maya pyramid, the Maya observatory, the Calendar pyramid and the human blood. For Kukulcan it was important to produce a final calendar which can talk about the end of time, in other words: the end of our solar system. To make it possible to say something about the end of the solar system we should try to find out what causes it, also in the Maya calendar. A termination is always caused by a binary star system and this is clearly marked out also in the Maya calendar.

I have compiled facts about the Maya civilisation according to existing material and my own knowledge. As a basis for Kukulcan’s assignment I compare it with the scientific activities of dynasties 0 and 4 in ancient Egypt.

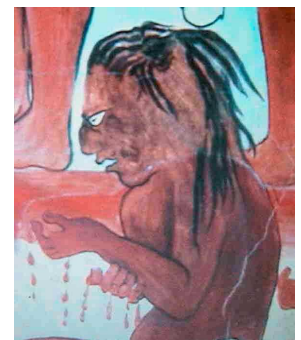

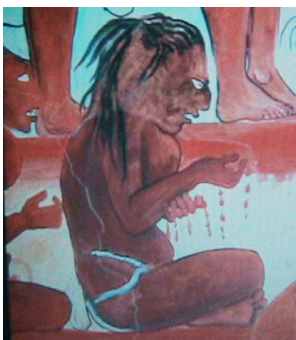

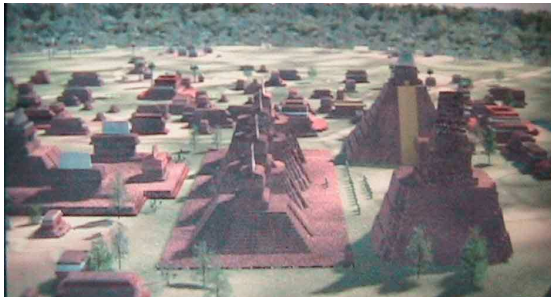

The Mayas, around AD 100-1541

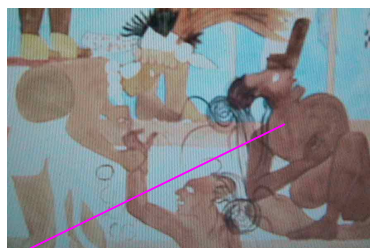

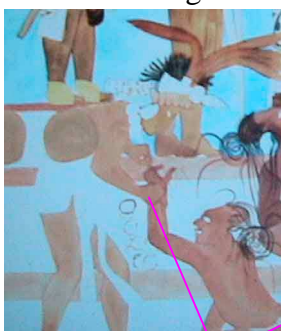

The serpent deity Kukulcan's strategy for the Maya realm was to create competition between different cities and dynasties in order to reach his personal goals faster and safer. One assignment for the Maya dynasty in the town of Tikal was for humans to sacrifice blood to the serpent deity Kukulcan. Blood sacrifice during daily activities had a serious background. People had a blood debt primarily to the deity Kukulcan and to the gods, but could that be true? This was not because they did not appreciate human life or blood, on the contrary they regarded human blood (blood 0) as being most valuable according to the laws and creation of nature. Human sacrifice and human bloodshed governed the strategic plans of the king. The king and his band of priests knew that human blood means life which is by far the most valuable and expensive property. The serpent deity Kukulcan was looking for life, human life. Around AD 200 the Maya civilization blossomed. Note that I in this context use available material and I interpret it according to my own knowledge.

The competing kings ruled the city with a rod of iron in the name of God. They were animal humans possessed by cruelty. In the town of Tikal, the first assignment from the serpent deity Kukulcan to the ruling kings appeared. The assignment was about human blood. The kings' families and relatives were in the project, almost all of them animal humans.

In the project were also donors, poor human beings with blood 0 and the rich animal humans mentioned above as recipients. The requirement was to drink as much human blood as possible. In the drawings we see a donor estimating the number of times he has given blood to a recipient while another donor is totally out of it because of blood loss.

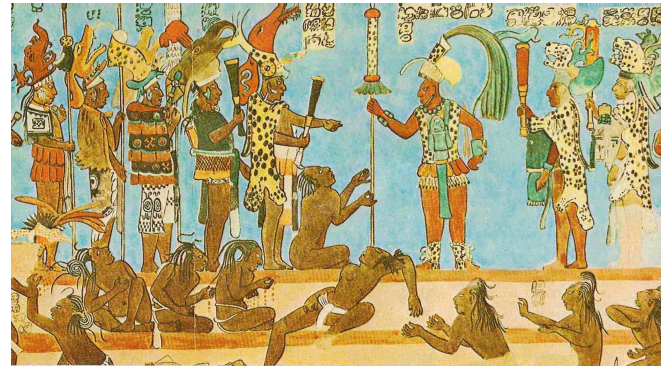

A qualified person pricks the right hand of the donor. Behind the donor is a recipient who is waiting for the fresh blood from the donor.

Here two donors are waiting for a recipient.

A striking document

The recipient sucks blood directly from the donor's right hand. These pictures are striking.

A donor is exhausted after having given much blood. We can clearly see Os around him, or circles symbolizing blood 0. It seems to be the case that people were not volunteers in Kukulkan's blood project assignment.

A mural from Bonampak depicts preparations for blood-letting from poor people. Rich animal human recipients belonging to the family of the priest king, dressed in jaguar hides and animal heads, surround the priest king adorned by the long feathers of the quetzal bird. They had everything except real life, i.e. human blood.

The purpose of blood sacrifice was to achieve a long-term transformation of the animal human's blood frequency into that of a human being's. They believed that if you drink much human blood, the individual's blood can be transformed into blood 0.

Pictures 1 and 2 above display two different symbols. One picture shows a serpent, Kukulkan, eating a human being. The aim of the serpent was to become a human being, with human blood. The other picture shows Kukulkan being born again as an animal human, he had a human body. The purpose of the project was that primarily the king and his family would participate. If a success, the god Kukulkan himself would take part and become a winner. If a failure, there would be no human blood for the god and royalty. Kukulkan followed the activities in the background, away from the centre of events.

Palenque

The Temple of the Inscriptions
was a complicated Maya project

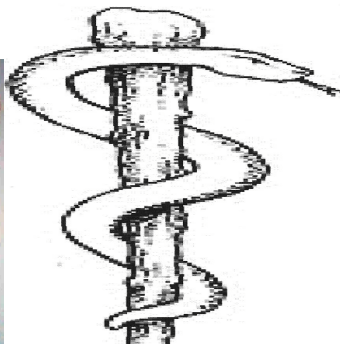

Pacal the Great was maybe the greatest king of the Maya realm. Pacal was a remarkable king who liked it best in the darkness of the town of Palenque. The end of a dynasty often led to catastrophe. As there was no obvious heir to the throne, the Elders looked around and found a woman outside the realm. Her name was Zac Kuk.

The town of new challenges

was then called Palenque

Mother Zac Kuk and her son Pacal

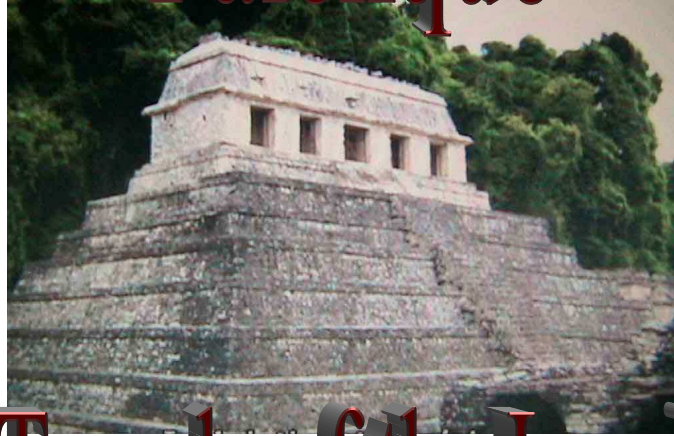

Son and mother

The past life of the secretive King Pacal the Great is preserved in the sepulchre of the Temple of the Inscriptions. The saying is that history repeats itself and it did in the sepulchre of Pacal. There are strange things there to have a close look at.

Palenque

The Temple of the Inscriptions

...down into the unknown

At the bottom is a narrow corridor. There is a stone coffin containing six skeletons, remnants after human sacrifices. For whom and why?

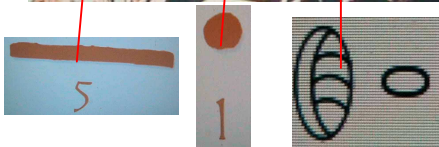

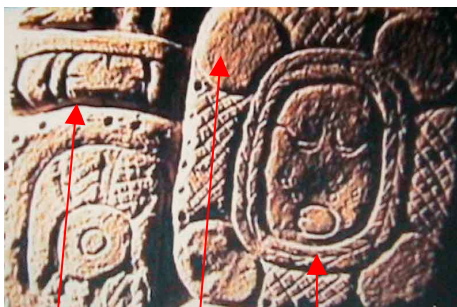

An enormous door. A massive, triangular stone.

Behind the door is a vaulted crypt, 9 metres long and 7 metres high. In the crypt we find this enormous sarcophagus.

On top of the sarcophagus is this magnificent block with exquisite reliefs of King Pacal.

Along the edge is a picture of a shield, just like in the temple. The Maya word for shield was 'pacal'. In other words: The king's name was Pacal.

But who was this Pacal who reigned for about 60 years and why was the Temple of the Inscriptions built? On his shield we discover remarkable things. At the centre of the shield is a large circle, 0 or zero. Inside the circle are two bull's heads. Four smaller circles/zeros surround these two heads in the large circle or 0. Below the bull's heads is one more smaller 0 in the shape of a serpent. 0 in this context stands for human blood. The purpose of this shield/emblem is to symbolically demonstrate that if the serpent had been able to reincarnate as a human being, he could have ended up in Man's family as the fifth person. In this context, Man's family consists of four members with identical blood groups. Had he succeeded he would have become dominant in Man's family, according to his shield. This shield is a symbol of the end of time.

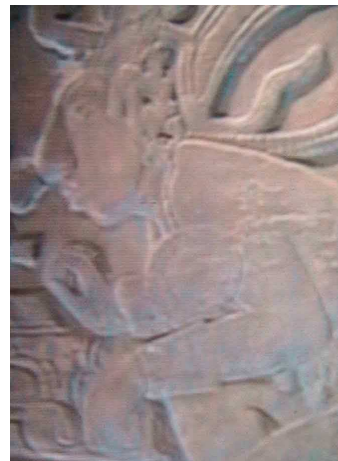

The shield can disclose one more thing: the Temple of the Inscriptions as such was a top modern biological research institute where probably research about the blood transformation process was carried out. The remnants in the stone coffin were part of the experiments, but they all failed.

The last person to take part in the blood transformation process in order to get human blood was the king himself, Pacal the Great. Since not one of six earlier attempts was a success, he decided to terminate the whole blood transformation experiment.

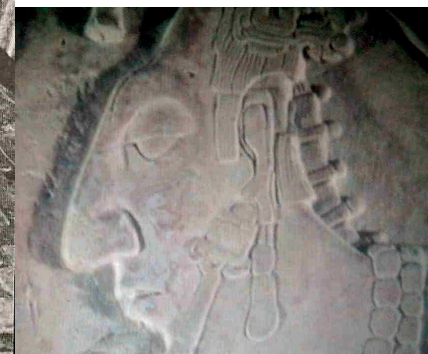

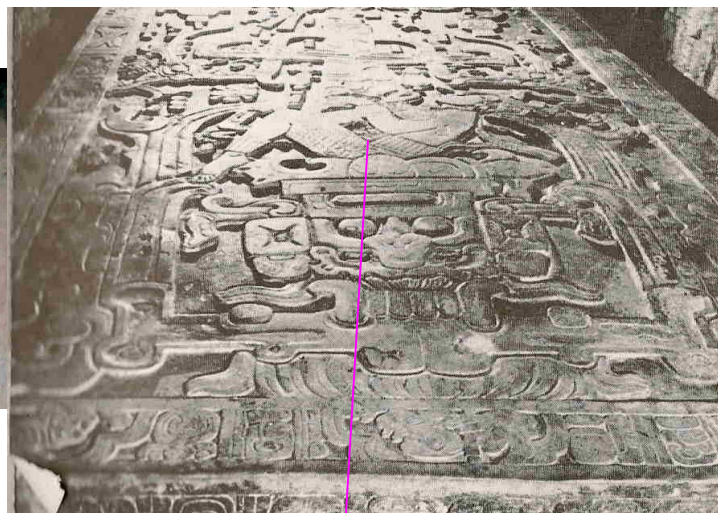

The block on top of the sarcophagus also discloses that King Pacal carried out his "Ascension". Was not Pacal's real name "Kukulkan?" Kukulkan, the Winged Serpent.

King Pacal in a spaceship

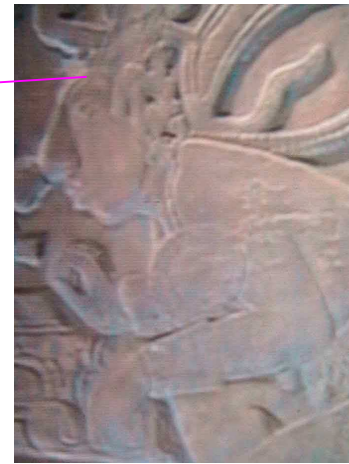

The serpent deity Kukulkan

Pacal the Great

The Maya King Pacal the Great ascended to heaven in a spaceship. But who is in the sarcophagus if Pacal disappeared in a spaceship? Had he been publicly pronounced dead and another person buried secretly? – Yes, that seems to be the case according to the picture above: one who is buried and one who ascends to heaven. The person in the coffin could not fly out into space.

Binary star system

The face symbolizing Pacal-Kukulkan. Beside the head, to the right and to the left we see a snakelike object keeping two suns in their orbits.

This is a symbol of a binary sun or a binary star system. This concretely means that King Pacal/Kukulkan could travel between two suns, to and from the neutron star Nemesis.

Pacal chose the spaceship and posterity believes that he is in the coffin even if a picture fairly clearly states that he left the Earth in a spaceship.

Pharaoh Amenhotep IV, Akhenaten in the Egyptian world, dynasty 18. His sun Aton is today named Nemesis. Even he knew about the binary star system.

King Pacal in Indian disguise.

Heaven and space are the same, our forefathers called the space 'heaven'. Travel in space was named 'ascension'. It seems to be the case that dynasty 0 through dynasty 4 in ancient Egypt made contact with aliens, then named 'angels'. Akhenaten carried out his ascension after having rules for 18 years. Certain Babylonian and Assyrian kings, as well as the Maya King Pacal, had access to spaceships. I can see parallels between Pacal and Akhenaten, a reincarnation of Akhenaten in Pacal. Crystal clear is, however, is that Pacal was superior to all other Maya kings when it came to knowledge (in gnosticism Jacob's letter deals with the Ascension of Christ/the Lamb, among other things). Early one morning the Lamb's eldest brother Jacob and the fisherman Peter secretly accompanied the Lamb up onto the Tabor mountain. On the way they talked, the Lamb handed power and knowledge to his brother Jacob. At the top of the mountain a spaceship was waiting for the Lamb. He embarked, waved one last time, then the spaceship took off and disappeared. I suppose that Pacal's ascension was similar. Pacal was accompanied by two of his disciples to a nearby hill and a waiting spaceship. After Pacal's embarkation, the spaceship took off and disappeared. Thereafter these two disciples carved out secret reliefs on the block of the Sarcophagus. They were familiar with Pacal's secrets.

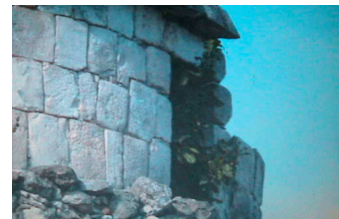

Chichén Itzá

The Maya Observatory

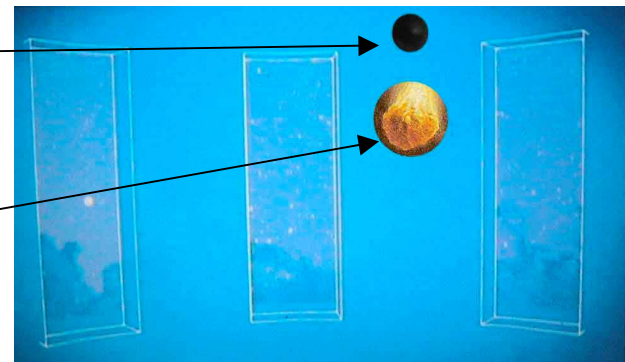

Many people today ask themselves: Why are the window openings in the Chicén Itza observatory not directed towards the most brilliantly shining stars?

Instead, the windows are open towards the stars/celestial bodies which are mentioned in Maya mythology concerning the arrival in space. Very advanced tools were used in each window opening.

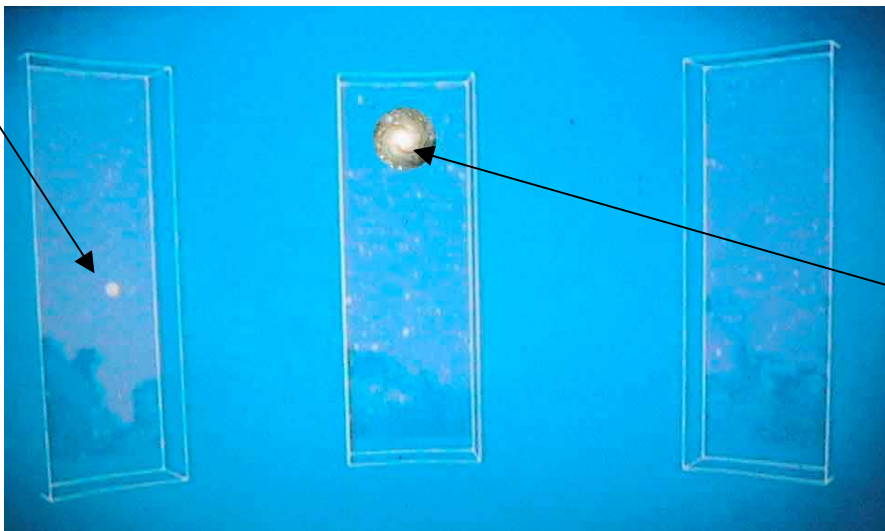

The Mayas were not interested in brilliant stars hundreds of light years away, their interest focused instead on dark celestial bodies such as neutron stars and asteroids. In this case the neutron star Nemesis; the people of Sumer called it 'An'. Akhenaten named it 'Aton', today it is called 'Nemesis'. It also exists in Revelations. The observatory was built between the years 800 and 1050 and its most important assignment was to find Nemesis. The Maya astronomers probably calculated Nemesis' pentagonal orbit and where to find it. Thereafter one window opening was directed towards the neutron star. In that way it was possible to follow its orbit. Their next issue of interest was the asteroid which will hit the Earth. The same opening was used.

Inside the observatory. One opening is directed towards dark celestial bodies and the black hole which is at the centre of the galaxy the Milky Way.

Kukulcan called himself the Morning Star Venus. The Maya Astronomers were particularly interested in Venus and its future. Nemesis as a neutron star has a terrible magnetic field, stronger than that of the sun. When Nemesis as a comet will come through our solar system there is a risk that the planet Venus will be dragged away from the solar system as Nemesis' eighth planet. This has been calculated by astronomers, will Venus leave the Sun or not? I think I have found the answer in their solar calendar.

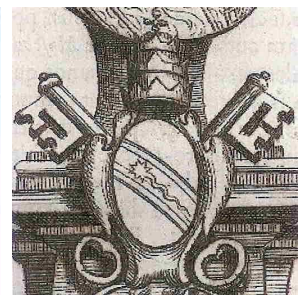

Many people ask themselves about the purpose of the Maya Calendar's 400-million-years calculations. What will happen then? The solar system has then voyaged about $3\,784,10^{17}$ kilometres, and will exist around the black hole. Or will it leave the galaxy and be on its way outwards...?

Nostradamus - Quatrains
 Century 2, Quatrain 41
 The great star will burn for seven days,
 The cloud will cause two suns to appear:
 The big mastiff will howl all night
 When the great pontiff will change country.

From the text above we can clearly see that Nostradamus also knew about the binary sun or star system and that Nemesis will be visible in the sky.
 (Nostradamus, 1503-1566.)

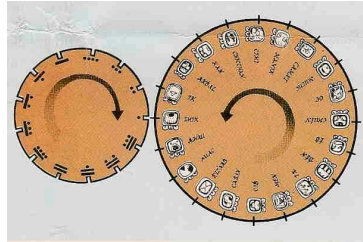

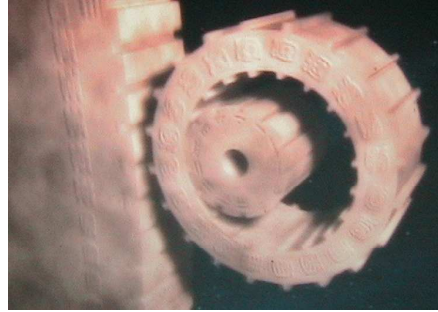

Leo XIII,
 1878-1903

Both Papal coats of arms are striking, we cannot misunderstand them. Innocent VII, 1404-1406, already knew that the neutron star Nemesis is on its way here. Has the Holy See seen the Maya Indians' secret records?

The Mayas had two calendars, one ritual and one solar.

In their calendar calculations they did not presume that the world was created a year corresponding to 3113 B.C. and that it would perish on 21 December, 2012. What does this mean?

In 3113 B.C. the world was created according to a very bad interpretation. Dynasty 0 then ruled in ancient Egypt and huge biological research projects were created in the "blood transformation" context. But we cannot regard that as a creation of the world.

If we take a close look at the year 3113 we see that it is the orbit of a celestial body which orbits the Sun in 3113 years. If we assume that the end will come in 2012 and that Akhenaten's ascension took place around 1336 B.C., that preparations for Israel's exodus from Egypt were carried out shortly afterwards, then we have 3348 years.

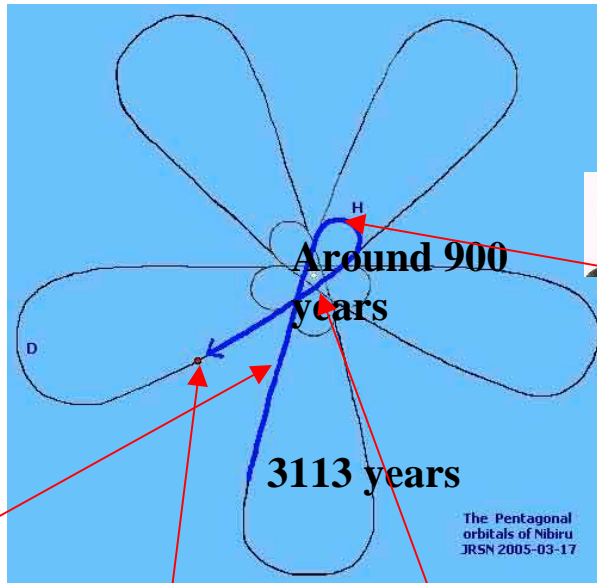

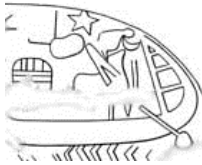

Difference: 235 years. In this context, 235 years might be a miscalculation. The question is how exact the ruling times of the pharaohs were written down. In the 18th dynasty there are different time notations. The same goes for dynasty 0 to 4. But I assume the Maya astronomers were correct.

month	day	hour	minute
Sept	22	14	49
Dec	21	11	11

The Mayas were skilled mathematicians, astronomers and calendar calculations. They used zero and their calendar was more exact than the Gregorian calendar. The question is from whose birth the new time is calculated, since no Messiah was born in 4 B.C. But there are sources that say that the total time of orbit is 3661 years. If we pick 2012 and add the foundation of the 18th dynasty in ancient Egypt around 1560 B.C. the result is around 3572 years, i.e. fairly close to 3661 years.

Nemesis and the Maya Calendar

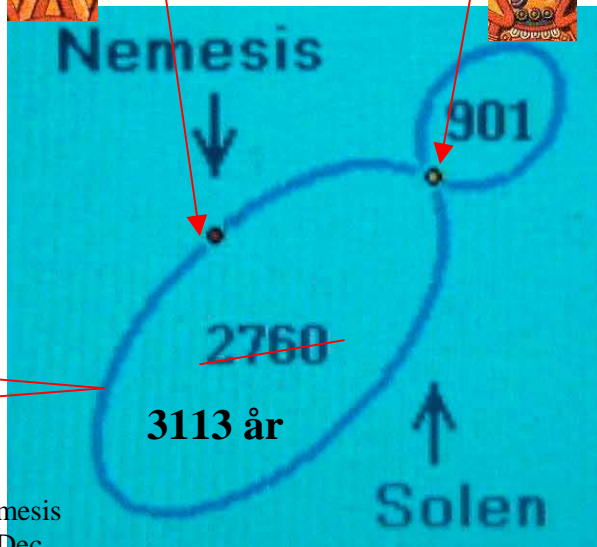

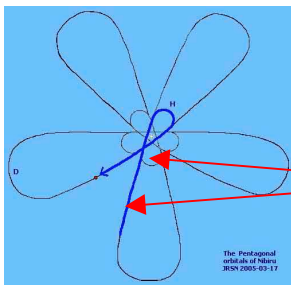

Moses

Menkaure, dynasty 4.

A pharaoh who is almost only a mystery. The year of his death was written down as around 2472 B.C. but I personally believe that he ascended because AN/Nemesis went through our solar system and entered a shorter orbit around the sun. There was a new plan in his head. In those days chaos reigned and natural catastrophes took place during hundreds of years. Dynasty 4 finished its activities or history around 2560 B.C.

Amenhotep IV, Akhenaten, dynasty 18 Secrecy was strict also around him. Akhenaten re-christened the neutron star AN to "Aten". After Aten's orbit around the Sun (900 to 1 000 years, according to Nostradamus) the next large event took place. Around 1336 B.C. Akhenaten ascended and after that the plans for the exodus from Egypt and the foundation of Israel were prepared by Moses and Aaron. At that time natural catastrophes were abundant. Because of this Moses and the people of Israel were forced to walk round Mount Sinai in around 40 years. Natural catastrophes and chaos began as early as around 1560 B.C. at the foundation of dynasty 18.

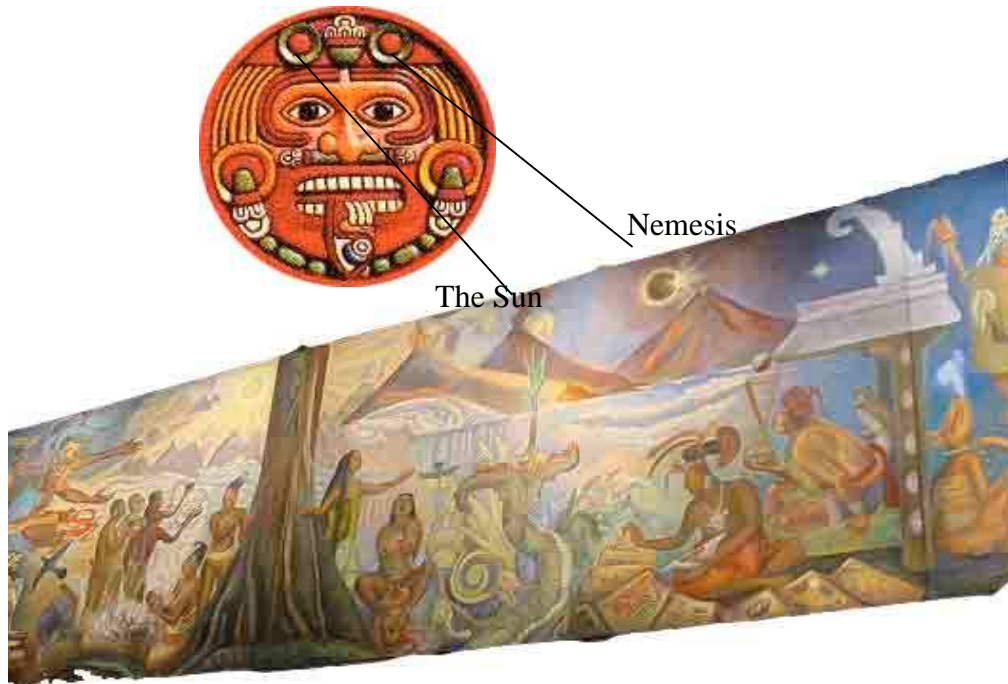

This illustration shows a total time of orbit around the sun, around 3661 years. The short orbit, around 901 years, might be acceptable even if I would like to exchange the long one, 2760 years, for 3113 according to the Maya calendar, since Maya calculations are much safer. In this way we get a total orbit of around 4014 years.

The estimated time of arrival for Nemesis to the borders of the solar system is Dec 21, 2012. After that it continues to the short orbit.

It seems to be the case that the long orbit of Nemesis (3113 years) and the orbits of the Sun, Venus and the Earth are the bases for the Maya calendar. It is a very difficult and complicated calculation. In this way the Maya astronomers found out that Nemesis will reach the edge of the solar system on December 21, 2012. We will experience that also an asteroid of moderate size will hit the Earth. Man's last paternity issue and the end of time are also there as well as a terrible, long war, noticed by, among others, Nostradamus.

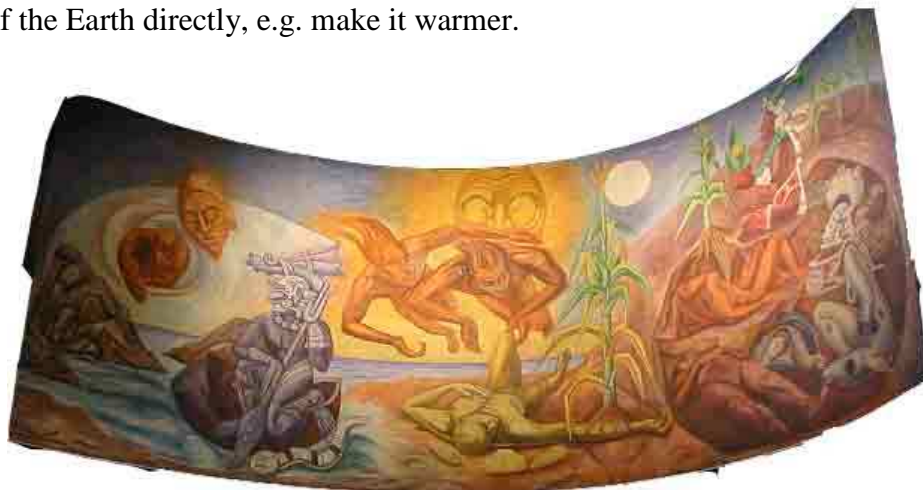

Nemesis which regularly returns in certain periods of time is called Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. It is accompanied by planets, asteroids, gravel and dust clouds, like a comet. The Maya calendar's calculations for a time period of 400 million years are unbeatable. It was a pleasure for the serpent god Kukulcan. We can understand that the Maya realm suddenly disappeared since the blood project was a failure and the serpent Kukulcan remained a snake. To avoid the wrath of God people have dispersed in all directions. Kukulcan was neither man nor woman.

A painting from the Maya period. We clearly see that this painting illustrates the end of time connected to the return of the neutron star. Nemesis will pass the Sun and enter the shorter orbit, around 900-1000 years. Personally I connect this painting to the Maya calendar 2012. Nemesis will cause lots of terrible natural catastrophes of almost all sorts in 40 years. Today's natural catastrophes such as floods and earthquakes signal that Nemesis is approaching the borders of the solar system.

Personally I see this picture as preparations for future catastrophes at the end of time. The Sun looks strange, as if a heavy celestial body affects it and thereby making the Sun increase its activity to affect the climate of the Earth directly, e.g. make it warmer.

The End of the World

According to the Maya Calendar

The End of the World is not a new theme. The Earth has perished a number of times before and life could still go on, which it will again. We need to keep things apart in this context, for example “The End of the World” and “Doomsday”. The End of the World arrives because of nature’s own rules, Doomsday is the day of wrath and revenge, it is thus personal and has nothing to do with nature.

Our solar system is a binary star system. Around 65-70 % of our galaxy consists of binary star systems and is the foundation of micro cosmos as well as of macro cosmos. When one sun or star passes the other in fixed periods constellation, which cause gigantic catastrophes, appear. The Sumerians, Egyptians, Babylonians, Assyrians and Indians knew this. What does today’s science, in this case represented by NASA, know about this? NASA has two faces and ambiguous messages. Officially NASA has no knowledge about the binary star system, but unofficially they do. The film industry has produced the film of The End of the World, a film which was very well made and very instructive. The people of the Earth should study the contents of the film a bit closer before it is too late. The film was shown for the first time in Sweden on 13 November, 2009. The same evening the film was shortly introduced in public Swedish Television together with comments from scientist Jim Garvin at NASA. His comments are ambiguous: one for a short period of time up to 2012 and one, unofficial, looking forward to the time after 2012.

His comments, official, short period of time

Analysis

- 1, There will be no magic constellation, neither now nor in 2012.
- 2, No planets the size of Mars will crash on Earth
- 3, We are in full control of the space close to Earth
- 4, We are not aware of any comets or asteroids which might cause catastrophes
- 5, Our planet is a tough rascal. It will survive all attacks

That is correct, between now and 2012 no constellation.

Also correct, no planets the size of Mars will crash on Earth

NASA is in full control of the space inside as well as outside the solar system

Also correct, between now and 2012 there is no risk of catastrophes, neither by a comet nor an asteroid

Our planet is certainly a tough rascal which has survived destruction before, but on the other hand, Jim Garvin, NASA, and the people on this planet are not as tough, it is about people’s survival, not the survival of the planet.

If we analyze NASA scientist Jim Garvin’s comments on the film about The End of the World we notice that his comments are empty phrases for knowledgeable persons while his additions to the film are very cunning, maybe reassuring for people with less knowledge.

The Threat from Space is Kept Secret

Published 2009-06-11 13:58

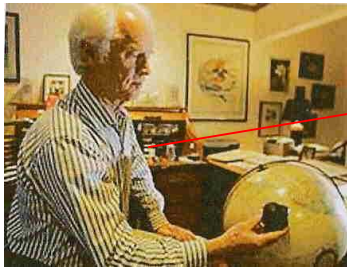

Last summer we could read this in media:

Stones/asteroids from space hitting the Earth are now concealed. USA spy satellites will no longer provide scientists with info on these dangers from space.

Up to a couple of months ago American spy satellites looking for suspicious nuclear arms tests have also registered these space stones. The observations have then been forwarded to scientists who, among other things, are estimating the danger for the Earth of being hit by these stones.

Now, transparency is over. Since some time back, all information from the satellites is secret, according to Space.com.

- It is to regret that we no longer can access these data, says a scientist who does not want to be named to Space.com. He and others now fear that it will be more difficult to predict similar events in the future since only American spy satellites are looking for such phenomena across the globe.

NASA in the US is trying to find measures to be able to avoid a collision. They have various suggestions, one of them is to steer the closest asteroid away. It is not a bad idea either. But there are also significant problems: which asteroid will hit the earth?

We must know that in advance, in time. There is a number of candidates among the asteroids in question, but which one will hit the Earth? It is a must to discover the closest asteroid in time to be able to plan measures to stop it.

NASA knows about the danger with asteroids threatening the Earth and because of this NASA/the US have stopped giving further information to the world's scientists about it. It is a long-term project which will take place after 2012, because of that unofficial, and Jim Garvin did not bring it into the open as a comment on the film.

This constellation will not be seen in the near future. The pictures are symbols of planets in our solar system only, planets which are lined up. NASA's Jim Garvin is right in this case.

These two pictures depict another case. Here we see the neutron star Nemesis as a comet in our solar system. According to the Maya calendar the comet will reach the outer borders of our solar system on 21 December, 2012. There will be no immediate catastrophe on Earth, but it symbolizes the end of our solar system, i.e. life on our planet – according to the Alpha and Omega system. A neutron star is characterized by a terrible strong magnetic field which dominates all other celestial bodies including the Sun in our solar system. In that way the Earth's magnetic poles will adjust to Nemesis, a pole shift will take place. We notice the shift since Nemesis has inverted magnetic polarity. The only power capable of creating such a dramatic change is the passage of a cosmic object with strong magnetic power, like for example the neutron star Nemesis. When Nemesis, the Earth and the Sun are in the correct conjunction, a never-seen gigantic earthquake will take place, an earthquake we have not seen for thousands of years. The whole globe will be affected.

The rotation of the Earth will be stopped and simultaneously we will experience a tilt of the Earth's rotation axis, it will "tilt over" completely. This concretely means that continents will end up below the sea surface level while others, deep down, will end up above. This will be caused by the presence of the neutron star Nemesis. Hurricanes, fires, droughts and a complete flood will dominate the Earth and finally the Earth will get a completely new climate and life will eventually start again, with new survivors.

Transformation. Short about transformation: If we follow cosmological development we know that the Earth will undergo a so-called "transformation", the Earth will be moved to a higher level of vibration. What happens during the passage, when Nemesis goes past the Sun, is that the Earth will be allocated a "wave frequency" corresponding to a higher velocity, i.e. the Earth's magnetic field is changed and a transformation into a higher vibrational level takes place. It will be same for all celestial bodies in our solar system. We already notice that time flies much faster than before and this is simply due to the fact that a heavy celestial body, the neutron star, is approaching the borders of the solar system.

Plate tectonics. Nemesis's strong magnetic field affects the movements of the tectonic plates on Earth and because of that earthquakes appear as well as tsunamis. The natural catastrophes are facts. The closer Nemesis comes, the worse the catastrophes will become.

We see from the film about 2012 that is a simplified image of reality, a reality we face and which will soon be here. We usually say that he who lives will see. History repeats itself.

When 20 years of the Moon's reign have passed
Another will take up his reign for seven thousand accomplished

Interpretation according to my knowledge is that there will be a shift of Gods, i.e. a new God will enter and rule for the next seven thousand years.
Nemesis will soon dominate the sun, which will become much weaker.

When the time has come, the Milky Way will become a dark galaxy. It has already begun its long voyage and is on its way towards its final destination

Man will leave life on Earth behind and very far into the future, when his world is mature, this Earth life, as a dream of glimpses without importance, will appear again. And the dream may become a nightmare.

New Heaven and New Earth, Rev.21:1
The text refers to Nibiru, the planet orbiting Nemesis's solar system. (Sumer document)

The most likely scenario is that a medium-sized asteroid will escape from Nemesis's tail and crash into the sea as a burning mountain. That is the worst possible scenario since there is no power to stop the free fall of an asteroid like that. When we notice that the comet has escaped and is heading for Earth it is too late to do anything. Revelation 8:8-9 refers to an asteroid like a burning mountain which will crash into the ocean. This asteroid is even programmed and coded so that nothing can stop it from crashing into the sea.

The Calendar Pyramid

Each step corresponds to one day, each platform a Maya month, the 365 steps thus correspond to the number of days in the Maya calendar. After 365 steps the temple meets at the top.

Two large serpent heads guard the steps of the calendar pyramid. A spiral is clearly visible on the head of the serpent. This spiral is a symbol of a spiral galaxy, the Milky Way, just like the Red Crown of Lower Egypt.

This mark means that the serpent Kukulcan has the whole role of the galaxy in his head. This is quite possible, I myself have also gigantic macro worlds as well as micro worlds in my head, i.e. all universe.

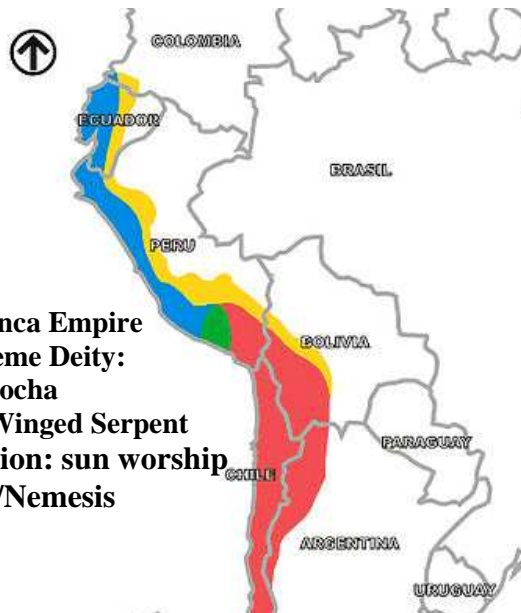

The serpent god Uraeus (Cobra) wore the crown of Lower Egypt, the Red Crown.

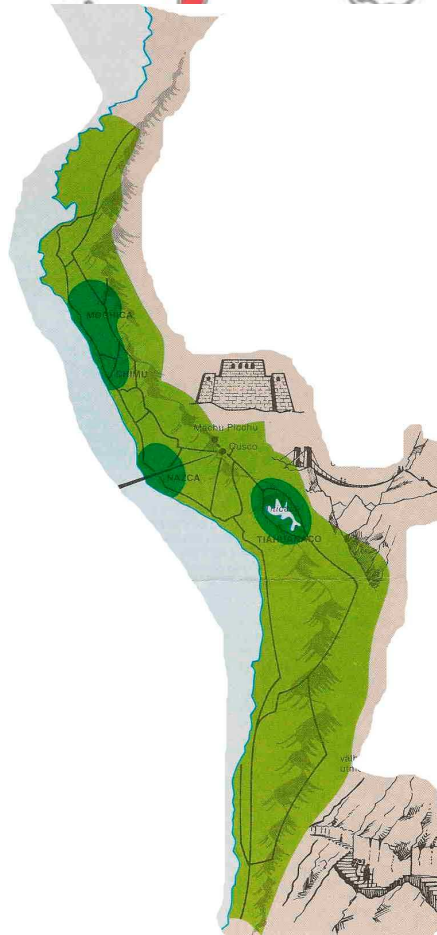

The Inca Empire, AD 1100-1533

The Inca Empire
 Supreme Deity:
 Viracocha
 The Winged Serpent
 Religion: sun worship
 Aten/Nemesis

Viracocha

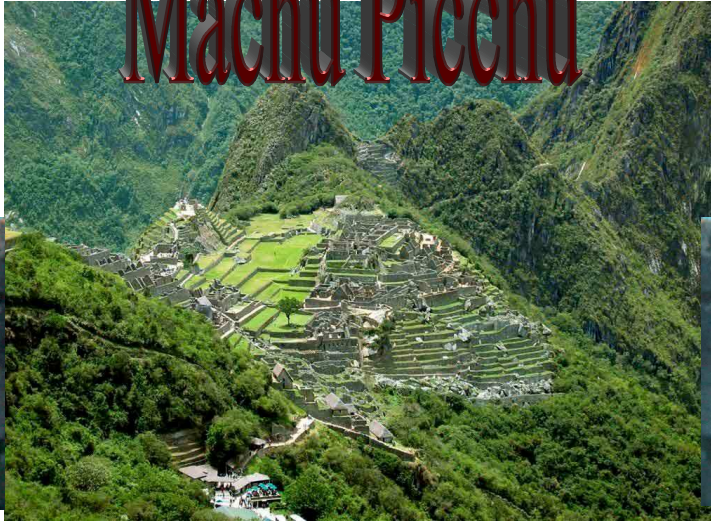

Viracocha

The serpent god Viracocha had only one single assignment for the Incas: to transform his blood into human blood, a gigantic challenge. In ancient Egypt four tests were carried out during one thousand years without success. Viracocha had chosen three cities where research and tests would be carried out: Machu Picchu, Cusco and Tiahuanaco. Viracocha ventured everything via scientists, researchers and engineers. Time was short and the goal was a biological utopia. Bu the never gave up. I have compiled the Inca Empire according to available material and my own knowledge. As a basis for Viracocha's assignment for the Incas I have used as comparisons scientific activities during dynasty 0 and 4 in ancient Egypt.

Machu Picchu

Machu Picchu, the city which had a perfect geographical position. Viracocha had initiated competition among these three cities. The Inca scientists had around 300 years at their disposal for biological research and development which were carried out in strict secrecy and with increased speed. Machu Picchu had its own research team in the Andes.

Machu Picchu. If we take a close look at these wonderful pictures of Machu Picchu we soon see that this small community more and more looks like a super modern so-called “science village”.

In this science village there were 150-300 researchers, scientists and engineers working for Viracocha only. The level of competition towards Cusco and Tiahuanaco was very stressful for this science village.

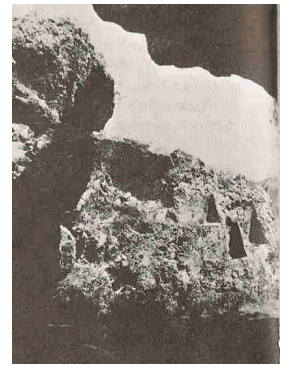

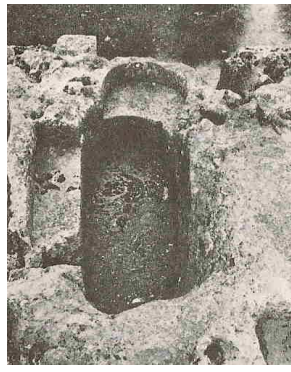

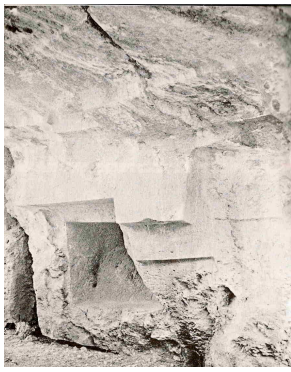

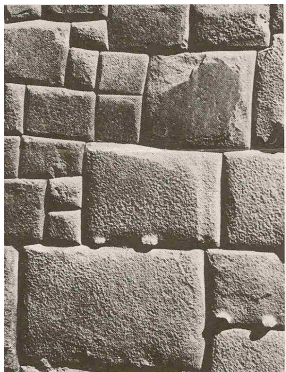

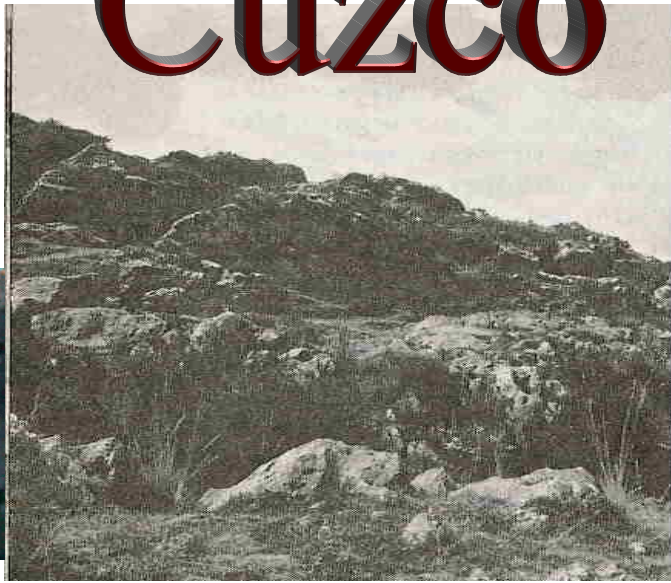

Machu Picchu in the Andes, an isolated formerly science centre, 2,500 metres above sea level, today in ruins.

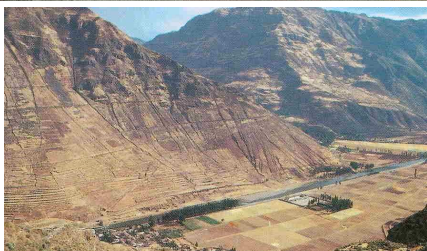

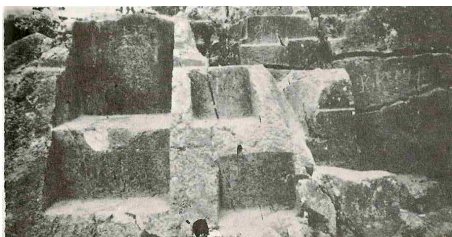

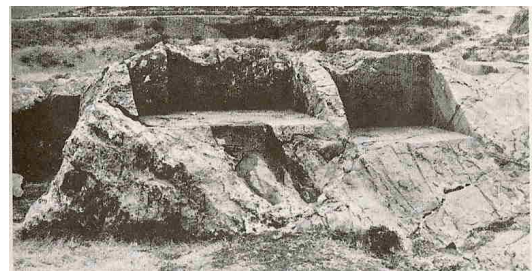

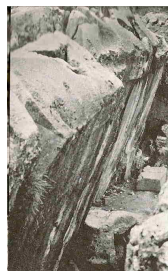

Machu Picchu in ruins. This was once a prospering biological science centre. They worked on the blood transformation process, i.e. on transforming other types of blood into human (O) blood. They believed they were the first team to work with this. They had no idea that the ancient Egyptians were the first people on this planet who failed to transform one type of blood into another. But anyway, all test results accomplished by the researchers were secretly sent to the city of Tiahuanaco.

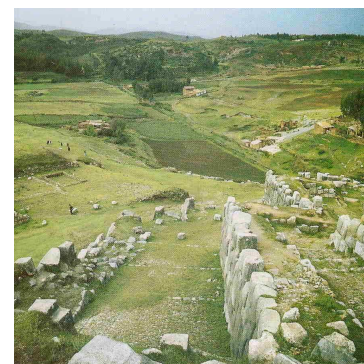

Cuzco

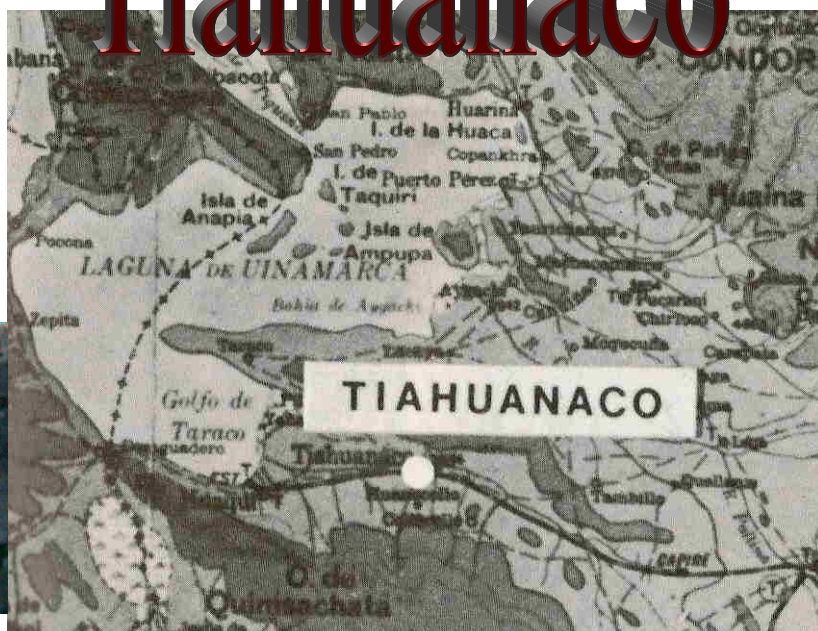

At 3,500 metres above sea level, on the mountain above Cuzco in Peru, we can see these so far unexplained stone works. We find perfectly polished surfaces and we get a feeling that the mould was removed from the concrete yesterday. But this is not masterpieces of concrete, this is perfectly sculptured granite. What do these soberly delivered works of art in the ravines mean? The purpose was to create a small science village, a competitor to Machu Picchu.

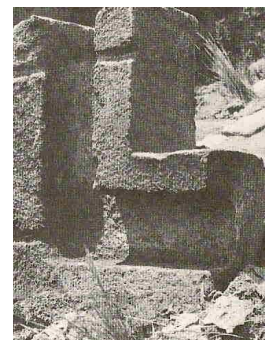

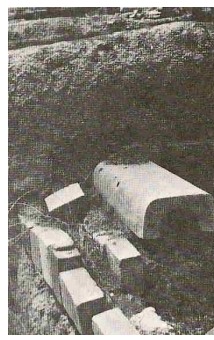

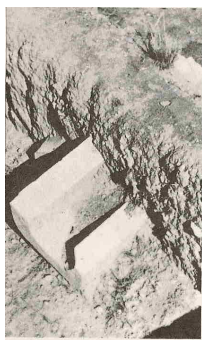

Ruins in the Andes. Cuzco was the capitol of the Inca Empire, 3,467 metres above sea level. At the beginning of the 15th century this area was still divided into many small political units. Among these, isolated and forgotten, was Viracocha's biological institute for blood transformation tests. No one could anticipate that the works of God would be completed by Inca scientists and researchers. All test results from the researchers were secretly sent to the city of Tiahuanaco for further handling.

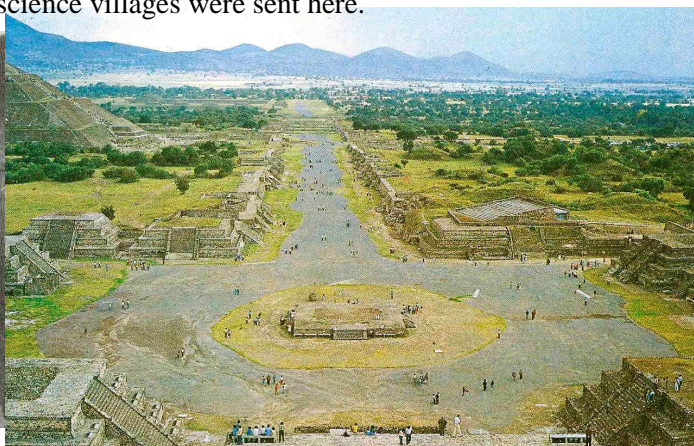

Tiahuanaco

The city of Tiahuanaco was maybe the deity Viracocha's most important biological science centre. Here some blood transformation processes were secretly carried out. No one was to know what the scientists had been doing.

The monolithic sun gate in Tiahuanaco is three metres high and four metres wide; 48 quadratic signs in three rows flank a flying god (Viracocha). The weight of the sun gate is nine metric tonnes. The remaining four pictures depict water pipes in ruins. Water was the most important constituent of all the tests carried out by the researchers. All tests from the other two science villages were sent here.

Somewhere here in Tiahuanaco, in a specially constructed pyramid, some blood transformation processes with test persons took place. We will never know who they were. Viracocha himself was extremely careful when it came to take part personally without a safe result. Initially, some people from the families of the kings and priests were elected to test the blood transformation system.

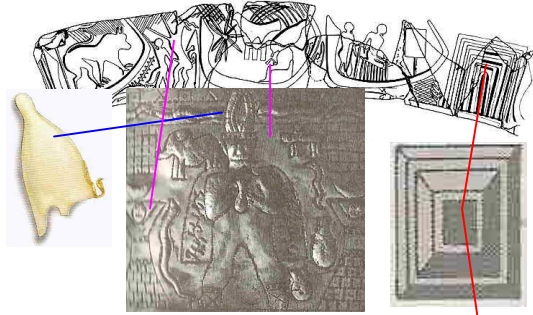

The Blood Transformation Process

in the city of Tiahuanaco

I can compare this transformation process to the Egyptian experiment which took place around 4,500 years earlier during dynasty 0-4. (Further information at the link Dynasty 0) Inca's blood transformation process was fairly similar to that of the Egyptians.

Inca's blood transformation system

The most important thing to be born again as a human.

The goal was to become human again.

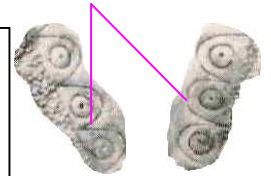

This remarkable silver disc displays biological notations on a blood transformation process. We can see a number of defined areas representing, for example, various skeleton parts in various situations.

The serpent is at the centre of events, but probably there was no blood transformation process for him because no experiment before him had been successful.

Each individual has his own blood frequency, it is personal. The scientists knew about this. Therefore a new level of frequency was created using three different blood groups 0. The entire blood transformer was embedded in the crown on the test person's head. Should a blood transformation process from blood B to blood 0 succeed, the old personality would be eradicated by the new blood's level of frequency. Viracocha knew this. The blood transformation system was fairly similar to that of the Egyptians. The difference was that in this case the frequency level of blood 0 was reinforced by a double group of blood 0.

An illustration of a binary star system and an item similar to a boomerang. The boomerang is known for its capacity to return to the thrower if the target is not hit. Nemesis returns in defined periods of time and new possibilities to new blood trials turn up.

This figure depicts the competitor Lion with a 6-pointed crown.

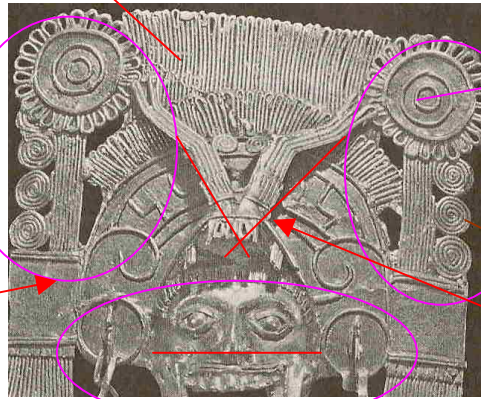

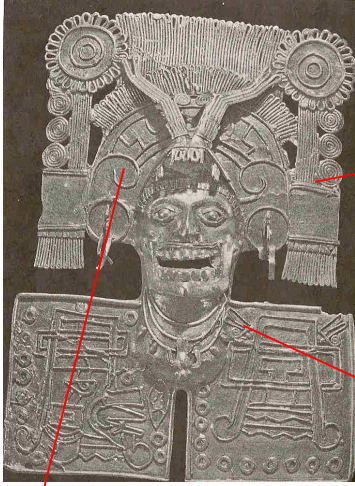

Blood transformer

Blood cells were also part of the research, there was a risk for acquiring blood cancer.

This skeleton figure depicts earthly Adam, the animal human, the serpent's competitor.

Mixtecs, AD 1350's. Did not the Inca scientists cooperate with the Mixtecs? The actual blood transformation systems are very similar.

Binary star system

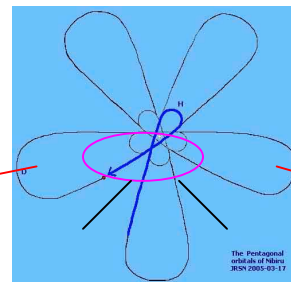

The head/the crown
Our spiral galaxy the Milky Way.
To enter the new world which is being created inside the galaxy, you have to be human with human blood, i.e. blood 0.
Viracocha knew exactly the requirements to enter the new human world.
It is clear that Viracocha kept science in his head.

The body/the chest
We can actually and without difficulties see a modern integrated electrical circuit in the signs. In other words: a circuit card with clothes. We also see Alpha and Omega.

Mictlantecutli was the Mixtecs' God of Death. But who was he? On the left side of his chest we see the Alpha and Omega signs which belong to the serpent. Were Mictlantecutli and Viracocha identical?

Did he not lead a double life? According to the signs it seems to be the case that Viracocha and Mictlantecutli could have been one person who led a double life. Viracocha initiated powerful competition among his science villages in order to reach his goal safer and faster. He had total control of the activities.

I can call the next picture cunning knowledge. The skull is visible and from it protrude two bent arms. Between the hands we see the neutron star Nemesis. If we put together the two arms we get a pentagonal orbit. Symbolic.

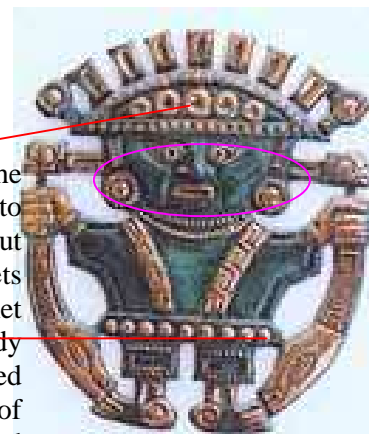

Is neither man

Viracocha

Serpents, serpents, serpents are everywhere, confirmed by the pictures. The winged serpent Viracocha carries the sign of Kukulcan. His primary goal was to enter Man's family as the fifth member with human blood. He also knew about the binary system and the way there. Nemesis's solar system has seven planets and Nemesis itself is the eighth celestial body. Viracocha knew that the planet Venus will eventually end up in Nemesis's solar system as celestial body number nine. His assignment for the Inca scientists about human blood failed and he remained a snake. After the failure he made his ascension in the city of Tiahuanaco and the people disappeared quickly because of his anger. He called himself Alpha and Omega. His subjects were serpents, dogs, oxen and bulls in human bodies, naturally.

Quetzalcoatl

Quetzalcoatl

The feathered serpent Quetzalcoatl had a short time to his disposal. He had not understood that all experiments to become human again had failed and he remained a serpent. His assignment for the Aztecs was short and correct: "Make sure I become human again!" he was very nervous and worried about his short period of time even if he knew that the assignment was a biological utopia.

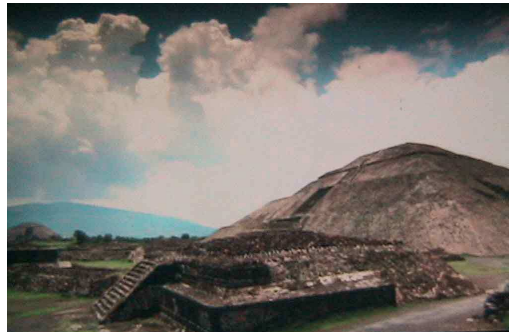

There are different views on him. In the stories written about him he leaves the city of Tula, founded by himself, and travels across the continent until he reaches the Mexican Gulf. There he disappears aboard a raft built of snakes and according to one version he is supposed to have burnt himself to death. In Tolteka, Aztec and Maya art he appears as a feathered serpent surrounded by a sun disc and flames of fire". He will appear among the Aztecs in his cunning way.

I have compiled the Aztec Empire according to available material and my own knowledge. The scientific activities during dynasty 0 and 4 in ancient Egypt form the background of Quetzalcoatl's assignment to the Aztecs.

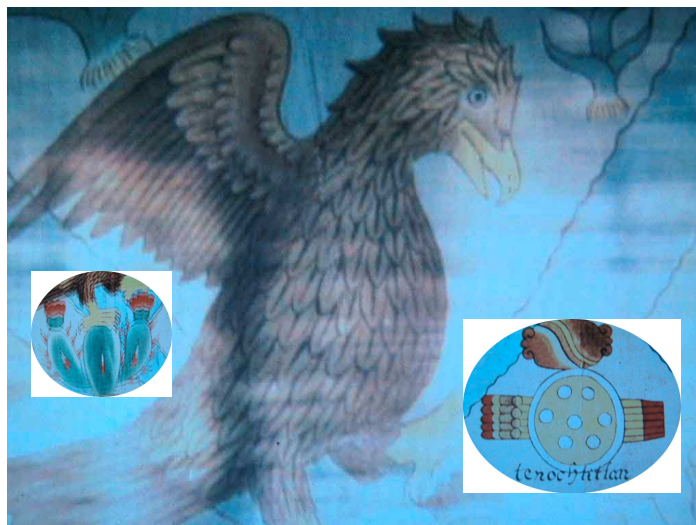

Tenochtitlán

The capital of the Aztecs was Tenochtitlán

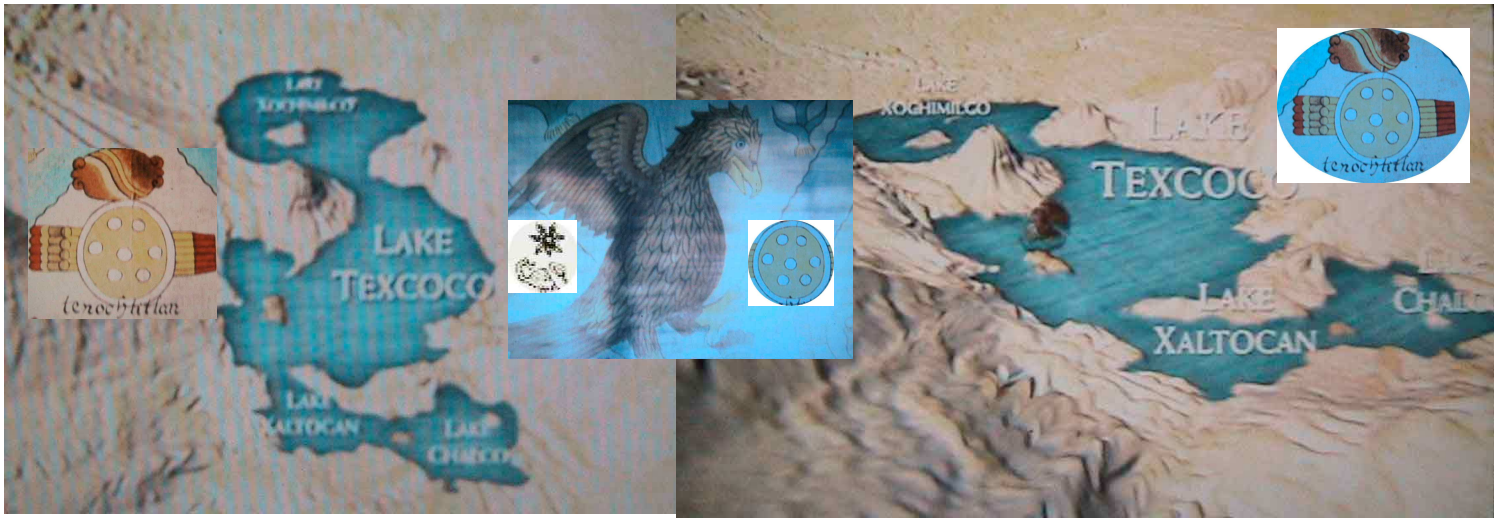

Tenoch

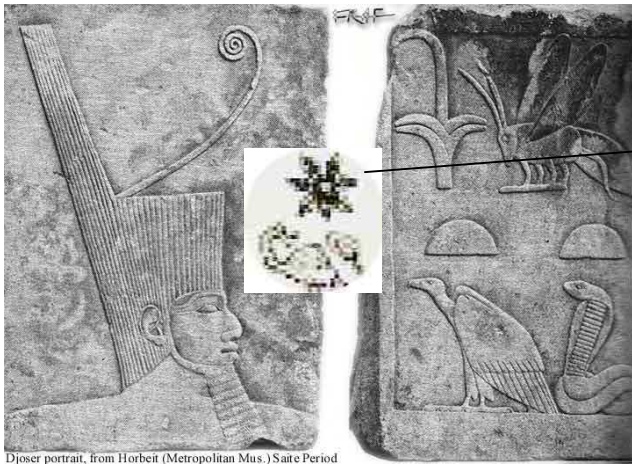

Tenoch

A strange sight. When the Aztecs looked out across the lake, the Aztec leader Tenoch said that he had seen an eagle sitting on a cactus in the middle of the lake. This was a sign from God that they had found their proper home. The city was called Tenochtitlán, or “The City of the Gods”. A vision of a powerful city, based on a city from the legends.

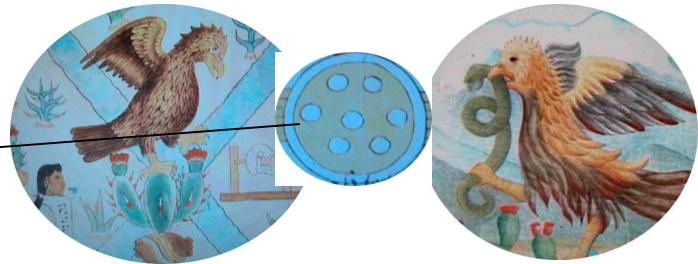

The Aztecs believed that Tenochtitlán was an image of cosmos and created by their gods. Now they wanted to recreate the image when they built their new city Tenochtitlán.

Before going on, I will have a closer look at what the Aztecs' purpose for the new city. Who is the eagle who was seen perched on cactus in the middle of the lake? In this short introduction the Aztecs reveal everything about how they saw the new city, its assignment and its origins.

Djoser portrait, from Horbeit (Metropolitan Mus.) Saite Period

Pharaoh Djoser's symbolic animal was the eagle. Pharaoh Scorpio II used the 7-pointed star as a personal symbol. Since they were the same person at different times, they shared the same original name: Earthly Adam, and the cobra behind the eagle follows every step of the eagle.

The history of the Aztecs starts like this: a sign from the gods that they had found their new home, also called the City of the Gods. We see two different deity symbols above: an eagle perched on a cactus in the middle of the sea with a serpent in its beak. Note that the eagle keeps the serpent alive. In this context that actually means that there two large groups of deities. In one we find the eagle, in the other the serpent, they are competitors. In other words: the earthly Adam fights the serpent.

Human blood as human sacrifice. The Aztecs believed that without sacrifice the sun would not rise and universe would die. This sounds as madness, but behind madness there is a hidden reality. We live in a binary star system. Which sun did the Aztecs mean? The symbols of one sun are a 6-pointed star and a lion, the other one depicts an 8-pointed star. In this case the symbol of the serpent is an 8-pointed star.

8-pointed star connected to human blood.

From the Aztec annotations we clearly see that in this case it is the 8-pointed star, or sun, which is the serpent's symbol. In Sumer this neutron star was called "AN". Akhenaten named it "Aten", today it is called "Nemesis". The serpent also calls itself sun, the dark neutron sun, or the neutron star Nemesis.

The message was that at any price the blood of the snake must be transformed to human blood, otherwise the serpent itself will die down, with animal blood it gets nowhere in a human world.

MOCTEZUMA I
c. 1440 - 1469

Tenochtitlán

The serpent god Quetzalcoatl was in Tenochtitlán under the leadership of Moctezuma I. He explained the rules for him, that human sacrifice is of utmost importance for further life. Moctezuma understood and promised to do his very best to reach the goal. – For the Egyptians (Dynasty 0 – Dynasty 4) it was eternal life, for Aztecs it was human blood.

Our galaxy, the Milky Way

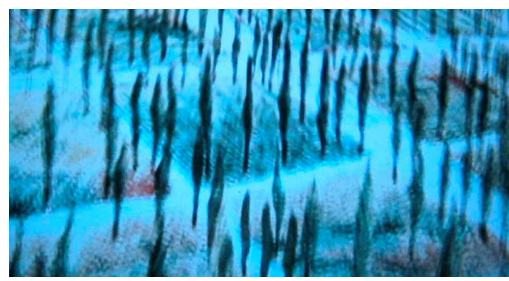

What do Moctezuma's shield and the seven-branch chandelier have in common? Both are simple models of our galaxy. The big circle is a symbol of our galaxy, the five smaller circles are symbols of Man's family into which the serpent would enter to become a fifth member. Below the big circle are seven different fields, in this context symbolising seven different worlds of vibration connected to dark matter. To the right of the big circle we see three more fields, they are symbols of anti worlds. From whom did Moctezuma I receive his shield? From Quetzalcoatl. Regarding the chandelier: see further information at the link State Coat of Arms and Science, page 8.

Quetzalcoatl himself as the dark sun

Quetzalcoatl himself as the dark sun

One of Moctezuma I's first projects, besides human sacrifice, was to protect the city from floods

To protect the city from the lake, they built their chinampas directly on the bottom of the lake. A chinampa was an artificial island similar to a football pitch. They were around 90 metres long and 9 metres wide. But as the Empire grew, the number of human sacrifices increased. Soon flood of blood ran along the streets of Tenochtitlán. It seems to be the case that also Moctezuma kept his promise to Quetzalcoatl.

Around AD 1460 Quetzalcoatl disappeared, probably in connection with an ascension.

If there was too much rain, the waters rose and flooded the city. This happened during the middle of the 15th century when a catastrophic flood hit Tenochtitlán. The city and its empire were almost totally destroyed.

Quetzalcoatl

A god who wanted to become human and a human being who was brutally sacrificed to prevent the sun deity from dying off. Quetzalcoatl probably lived among the Aztecs during the reign of Moctezuma I. One sign is the shield of Moctezuma which symbolises our galaxy and reveals that he personally met Quetzalcoatl and from him received the shield's galaxy symbol. Around 1460 Quetzalcoatl disappeared, he probably ascended. He promised to return. Did he return? Was he a white man? Did he use an Indian mask when he was among the Aztecs?

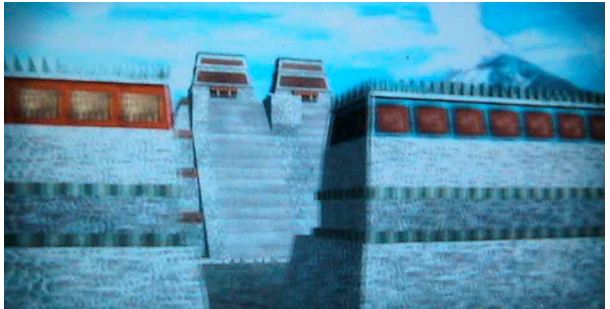

Quetzalcoatl also has secret signs which certify that he was very knowledgeable and without his participation the Aztecs would never have been able to draw these figures.

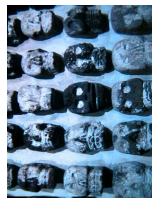

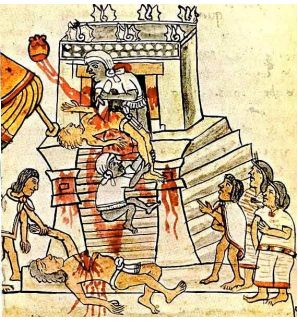

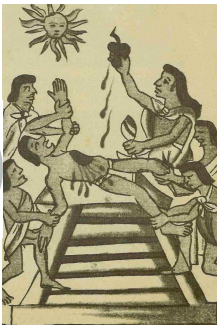

AHUITZOTL c. 1486 - 1502 Tenochtitlán

When the empire was at its peak the Aztecs under Ahuitzotl started their largest construction project: an enormous pyramid at the centre of Tenochtitlán, a symbol of their unlimited power. It was called "Templo Mayor", or the Large Temple. The pyramid's bottom area was 72x90 metres, its height was 15 storeys and it was used as an execution site. The new leader was maybe the most blood-thirsty beast of all leaders, kings and priests.

In order to inaugurate the temple King Ahuitzotl, together with his priests, carried out a mass sacrifice. The victims' heads were displayed on skull shelves around the temple. According to some chronicles 20,000 people were sacrificed despite the fact that Quetzalcoatl had left the city a long time ago. During the reign of Ahuitzotl the bloodshed increased dramatically. Life in Tenochtitlán soon became an orgy in death. On Ahuitzotl's shield a crescent is the symbol of revenge (the top field). The crescent is also a well-known symbol. During his reign the temple was decorated with around 136,000 human skulls.

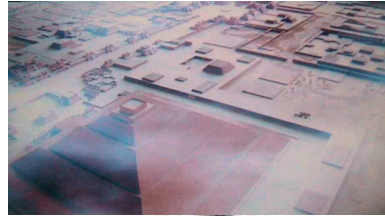

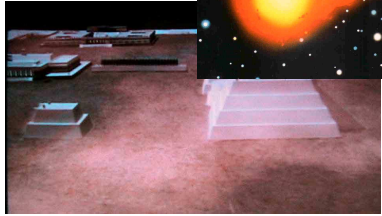

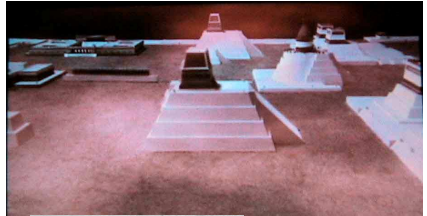

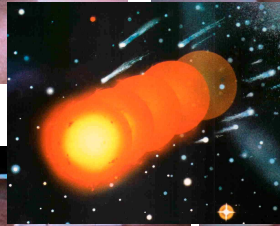

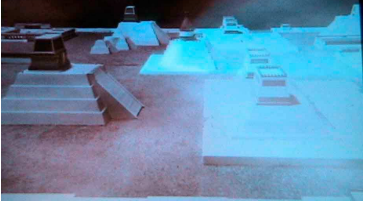

MOCTEZUMA II

c. 1502 - 1520

Tenochtitlán

The year is 1502. The Aztec king Ahuizotl is dead. The new king, Moctezuma II, a 34-year-old former priest, ascends the throne. He is known to be a skilled statesman and soldier. He is a tough leader who slaughters people in cities which refuse to surrender. – In another world, in Spain, 18-year old Hernán Cortés prepares to cross the Atlantic Ocean and do his part in the conquest of the New World.

Some years have passed and Moctezuma II is still a powerful Aztec ruler. But privately he has problems. He seems to be a passive person, he might have been depressive. According to legends he sees a comet sweep across the heaven of Tenochtitlán. He cries during the rest of the night and during the following weeks he grows increasingly paranoid. When his obsession with the super natural reaches a climax, a real threat appears from the ocean. Spies at the Gulf coast report strange sightings, sightings they cannot describe. They have never seen a ship and thus have no word for it. The Indians call them “mountains moving in the water”.

In 1519 Cortés left Cuba with 11 of these floating mountains. He disembarked with 500 men at the Gulf coast 320 kilometres south-east of Tenochtitlán on Good Friday, 1519.

Grottemplet i Malinalco

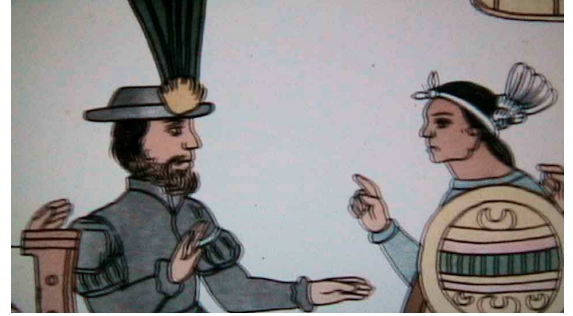

This is the cave temple of Malinalco, one of six temples on a mountain a few hours south of Mexico City. Moctezuma II built it in 1502 as a memorial of Quetzalcoatl. In Europe Michelangelo shaped the statue of David in Firenze, simultaneously the Aztecs were here and carved this temple out of the mountain. It is the only temple which has been built in this way in the western hemisphere. At the foot of the steps are two jaguar sculptures, on both sides of the doors are the remains of two warriors. The door opening is a symbol of the huge mouth of a giant serpent. You can see its tongue protruding from the room. This Aztecs believed this to be entrance to the Earth's womb, but it is a symbol of the Empire of Death. The warriors entered the room and sacrificed their blood and lives. There was no life there, only death. This temple was built by Moctezuma II as a memorial of the feathered serpent Quetzalcoatl and his return.

Hernán Cortés and His Army

The tribal people wondered at these men in metal armour and at animals they had never seen before. Resisting tribes along the roads into the country were brutally slaughtered, but many others provided the strangers with provisions and soldiers.

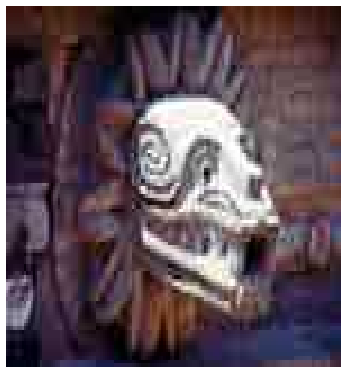

A local leader at the Gulf Coast ingratiated himself by giving Cortés and his escort a group of women. They were not only supposed to serve as housekeepers, they were obviously meant to be courtesans to contribute with sexual favours. Among the concubines was one who received attention from Cortés himself. She was the daughter of a headman and had been sold as a slave. Her name was Malintzin. They developed a close relationship and after some time she gave birth to his son. He was one of the first persons with mixed origins in the New World.

But she was much more than a mistress. She worked as Cortés's interpreter and soon she also became advisor and mediator between him and the Aztecs. She could also relate things that were not for him to hear. The question is: Who was this mysterious woman who came so close to Cortés?

Tenochtitlán

It is autumn, 1519. The Spanish conquistador Hernán Cortés reaches the Aztec capital he has heard so much about: Tenochtitlán. When the Spanish see Tenochtitlán for the first time, they think they experience a kind of enchanted dream. Cortés has then no idea how this adventure with Tenochtitlán will end.

The most important question in this context is: who was this dark, mysterious man on the Horse of Death and the woman who remained loyal?

The Encounter between the Two Worlds

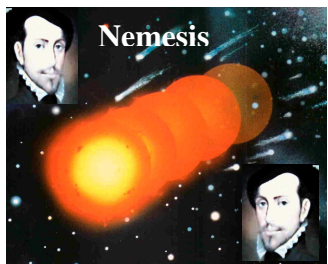

A large army of native warriors who had opposed the Aztecs accompanied Cortés across the bridge into the town. The first encounter with Moctezuma was peaceful and human. Cortés and Moctezuma II met on the bridge road at Tenochtitlán,

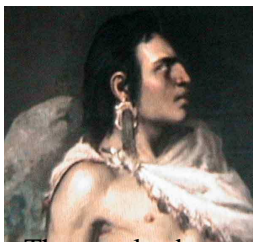

The encounter must have been one of the great moments of world history. Two completely different worlds met. Cortés gave Moctezuma II a wreath which reminded him of the assignment of his paternal grandfather concerning the failed human blood (O) experiment. Quetzalcoatl came back as a comet when least expected. Moctezuma II understood that time was out and that Alpha&Omega were back to destroy the Aztec Empire. He had earlier seen it in his dream: The return of a comet.

Moctezuma II invited Cortés and the Spaniards and allowed them to stay at one of his palaces. Moctezuma II's was an enormous complex which the Spaniards admired. But his palace became the last one to be built by the Aztecs.

Less than a week after their arrival the Spaniards attacked. They kidnapped Moctezuma II. It was a bold plan but it succeeded, they seem to have conquered the empire. Moctezuma II was still the city's official leader, but for some time he was only a spokesperson for Cortés. During the spring of 1520 it all came to a head. One morning Cortés and his men interrupted a holy sacrifice ritual and slaughtered the participants. Cortés believed that human sacrifice was unnecessary and that the Aztecs should have abolished it during the reign of Moctezuma I. This caused a rebellion. The Aztecs meant that this amounted to sacrilege.

The new leader, Cuauhtémoc

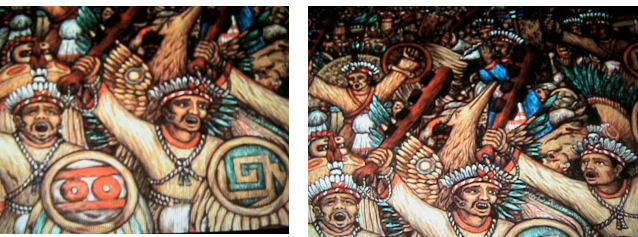

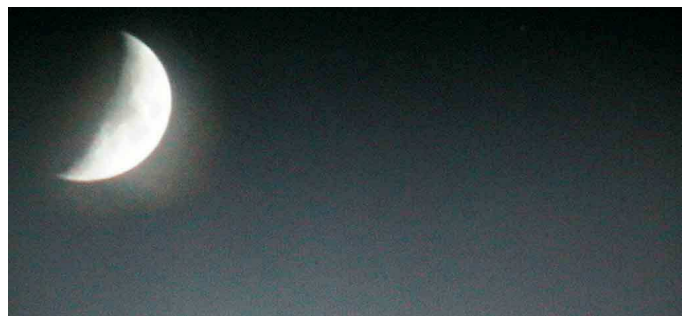

Moctezuma went up to the top of the palace to calm down his people, but they had had enough. Moctezuma was now regarded only as Cortés's puppet – the people never got to know the truth, the kings and the priests did not dare tell the truth about the feathered serpent Quetzalcoatl's plans regarding human sacrifice. Instead, they lied. The treachery was so blatant that he was bombarded with stones and arrows. Shortly thereafter Moctezuma II's lifeless body was thrown down from the walls of the palace. We will never know whether he was killed by the Spaniards or by his own people. The Aztecs then elected the 18-year-old Cuauhtémoc as a new leader of the empire.

Cuauhtémoc AD 1520-21

The last great Indian leader, Cuauhtémoc/the Eagle

The new king Cuauhtémoc assumed leadership of the empire. Cuauhtémoc means "the landing eagle". The Spaniards realized it was time to leave the city and during the night of 30 June, 1520, the Spaniards tried to escape in the dark. But they could not stand leaving the war trophies behind, so they were burdened by all the things they wanted to take with them. They were easy targets for the Aztecs who caught up with them on the bridge road. In a short while there piles of bodies in the water. 400 Spaniards and thousands of their native allies were killed. The escape is known as "noche triste", "the sad night". Cortés and a few others managed to escape. The new leader's main goal was to kill Cortés, thereby the Aztecs would defeat him. He recognized the serpent in Cortés.

The Eagle's fight against the serpent

The Spaniards would now destroy the golden city Tenochtitlán for good. But the Aztecs were very perservering and skillful and were not that easy to defeat under their new leader. So the Spaniards decided to attack from land and sea simultaneously. For centuries the lake around Tenochtitlán had protected the city against attacks. But Cortés found a way to circumvent that. He let his native allies carry his dismantled ships across the mountains and then re-assemble them in the lake. See pictures below.

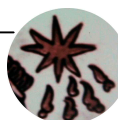

The Eagle's fight against the serpent

May, 1521. Cortés leads his large army in a final battle against Tenochtitlán, the Eagle. 600 Spaniards including 100 cavalry men and up to 50,000 native allies cross swords with the Aztec defenders led by Cuauhtémoc, the Eagle, on the cities bridge roads. Cortés, the serpent, levels the city with the ground, one block at a time and shows no mercy. The population is slaughtered. It is an extremely violent battle, particularly inside the city. The Aztecs defend themselves to the very last at the temple of Tlatelolco.

On August 13, the last Aztec leader, the landing eagle, Cuauhtémoc, was taken prisoner. He was executed by torture in 1525 by Cortés. 20 million people would die from diseases brought to the Aztecs by the Spaniards. Towards the end of the 16th century we estimate that the native population had been reduced with around 90%. This is how the Christian Cortés's salvation ended on the Horse of Death.

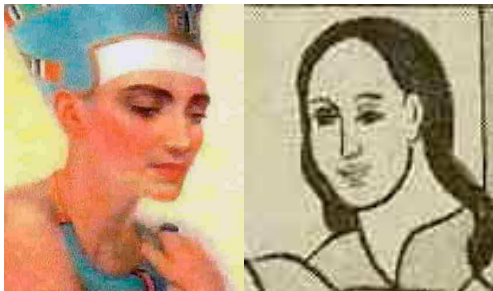

Alpha & Omega on the Horse of Death

The Feathered Serpent, Quetzalcoatl in ruins

In the world of Quetzalcoatl. At the centre we see the serpent, to the left and right we can find our binary sun system or binary star system as a symbol. Cosmological science was very important for the serpent. Our galaxy consists to around 70% of binary star systems which is the foundation for astronomy, cosmology and atoms. Without that foundation we can never understand micro- and macro cosmos, i.e. cosmology.

Tenoch was the founder of the Aztec empire around AD 1347. Tenoch means “rock”, “stone” or “fruit of cactus”. The last great leader was Cuauhtémoc, AD 1520-1521. His name means “the landing eagle”. Tenoch and Cuauhtémoc were the same person in different times, the original name was “earthly Adam” – “Adam’s fight against the serpent”.

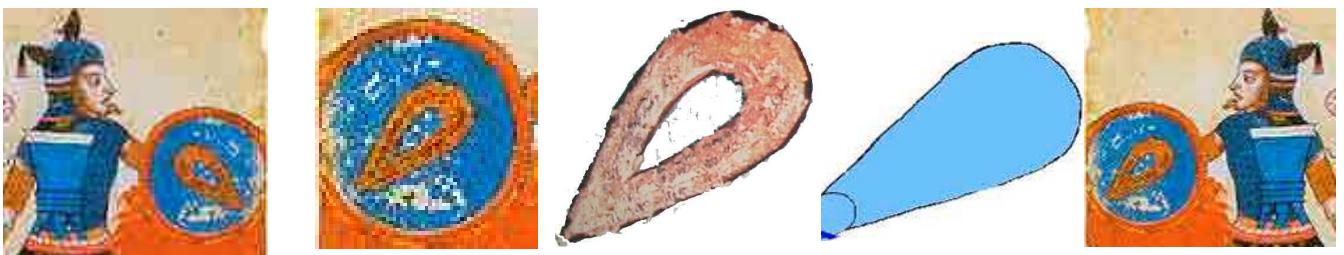

The feathered serpent Quetzalcoatl was reincarnated in Hernando Cortés in 1485. I can compare Cortés to the Egyptian pharaoh Amenhotep IV, Akhenaton in Egyptian shroud, dynasty 18. His spouse was Nefertiti, the only woman loyal to him.

The Indian Malintzin, who was a chief’s daughter, was Cortés’s partner for life, a loyal woman who helped Cortés levelling the Aztec empire with the ground. I compare her to Nefertiti, i.e. a reincarnation. Cortés called her Donna Marina.

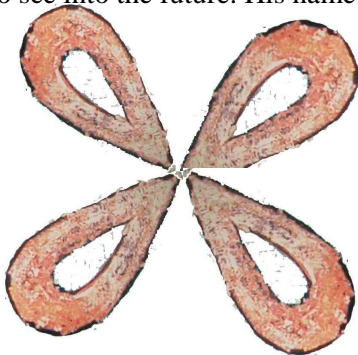

Egyptian Crowns and Indian Shields

The Egyptian pharaohs between dynasty 0 and 4 used their crowns as symbols of top-level science. Their activities were calm and human, posterity have not noticed or suspected anything. The Egyptians stuck together and unity was fairly stable, they avoided wars while their most important research was carried out. The crown was also a symbol of the brain's activities and activities around research and development.

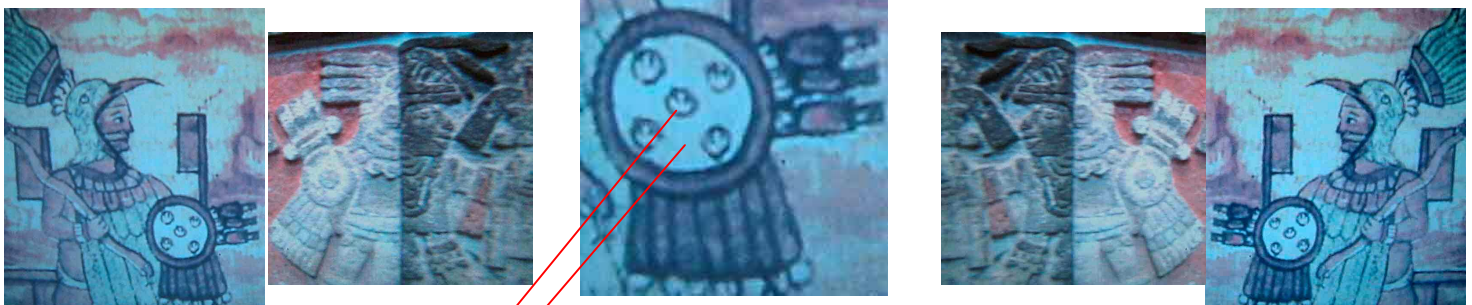

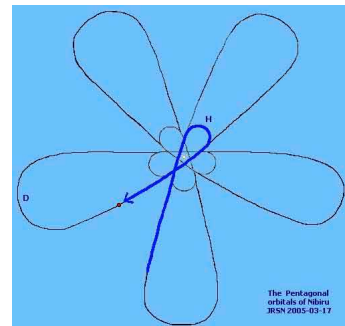

Indian shields were symbols of science, war, fights and competition to gain fast results which could satisfy the serpent god with human blood. I have chosen some shields connected to cosmological science below.

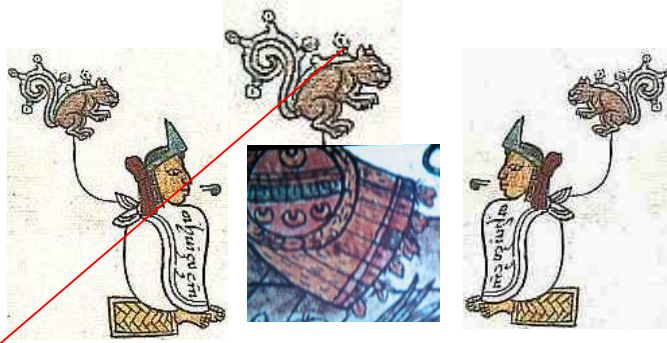

Nezahualcoyotl, around 1431-1472. His shield is a symbolic orbit round the Sun which takes 3,113 years. In the background we see the Earth. If we combine all five orbits according to the figure below, we achieve the full pentagonal orbit belonging to the neutron star Nemesis. It will appear as a giant comet at the end of time. This was also known by the Aztecs, they used the Maya calendar to see into the future. His name means "hungry coyote" in a science context.

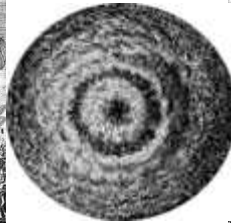

Nezahualcoyotl

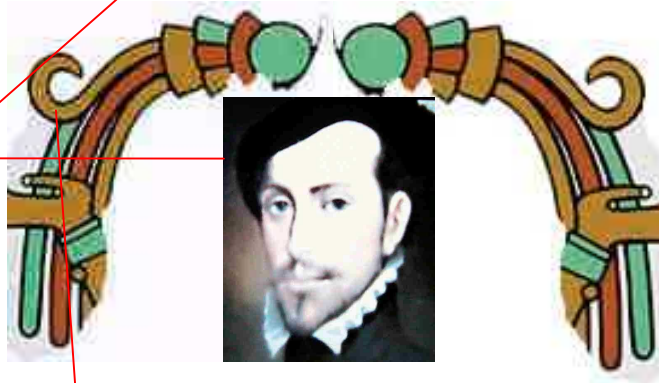

Moctezuma I, around 1440-1469. His shield, shaped like a circle, is a symbol of our galaxy. Below the circle are seven symbolic fields illustrating the seven vibrational worlds. To the right of the circle are three negative worlds of anti matter. The five small circles are symbols of five persons, the serpent was supposed to be the fifth member of the family with human blood, blood 0, Man's family, at the centre. Daniel writes about this person (Dan 7:13): "one like the Son of Man", " and Revelation (Rev 1:13) "someone like a Son of Man", valid at the end of time. It is obvious that the serpent is not Son of Man (in Christianity's profession of faith we read that God became a human in Jesus Christ through Virgin Mary and that Jesus is the son of God, in other words: God is his own son. It seems as if madness in this context has no limits, but maybe that is good enough for the flock of sheep). Moctezuma I has the serpent in his right hand to make the serpent turn into a human being. The name Moctezuma means: He who shoots an arrow to heaven.

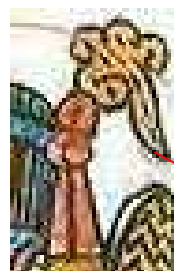

Ahuizotl around 1486-1502. His shield is also a symbol of our galaxy and the crescent is a symbol of revenge. His name means “water monster” or “otter”, we can see it above. Above the otter is a spiral in the shape of a serpent symbolizing a spiral galaxy. Here are also five small circles marked out, number five is a symbol of the serpent which he holds in his hand.

Moctezuma II, around 1502-1520. His shield is also a symbolic galaxy. In the middle is a somewhat better picture, a symbol of a spiral-shaped galaxy. Moctezuma II recognized Quetzalcoatl in Cortés. He was a child when Quetzalcoatl left the Aztec empire around 1460. He was friendly and respectful towards Cortés. It never came out what the two of them secretly talked about in Moctezuma’s royal palace. Crystal clear is Moctezuma’s paternal grandfather’s promise regarding human sacrifice and human blood was a failure. Cortés’s actions were after that a result of revenge. In other words: the Alpha&Omega was practised by Cortés. Moctezuma means “He who shoots an arrow to heaven”.

According to legend he saw a comet sweep the skies of Tenochtitlán. Cortés’s arrival at Tenochtitlán came like a bolt from the blue, i.e. he arrives like an unexpected comet. Moctezuma’s cap illustrates a comet and Quetzalcoatl/Cortés represent the comet Nemesis as a serpent.

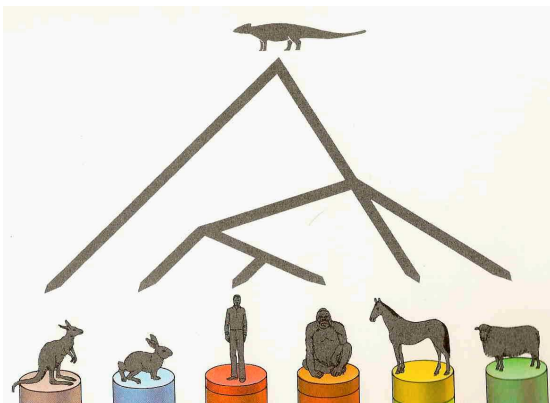

Cuicláhuac, 1520. Was elected leader after the death of Moctezuma II. His reign was short, only 80 days. He died from smallpox in December, 1520. His shield is a symbol of a binary star system. Hanging behind his head is an illustration showing Quetzalcoatl/Cortés, a reminder that Cortés is enemy number 1. His name means “he who is responsible/takes care”.

Human Sacrifice – Why?

The Egyptians' calm, creative and flexible blood transformation experiment was carried out sensibly. Posterity did not suspect anything and did not react. But with the Indians, the situation was totally different. Their supreme god, the serpent, had a different strategy about blood transformation. He initiated competition, fights among the Indians and entered into alliance with them. Blood transformation experiment and its basics was human sacrifice, the project was called Human Sacrifice which would have transformed the serpent's blood into human blood. But these human sacrifices were so brutal that they even came to be known to posterity, without any context.

Posterity has all the time wondered what was actually behind human sacrifice. One book of reference tries this: "/.../ A careful estimate is that around 15,000 humans were annually sacrificed in Tenochtitlán." How could the Aztecs find anything worthwhile in this waste of human lives? An ecological explanation has been tried. A hypothesis is that cannibalism gave the population a badly needed protein supplement, but this hypothesis must be rejected. Ritual cannibalism was part of the sacrifice ceremonies but not to an extent that makes it nutritionally useful to the people. Another hypothesis refers to the very large population and the instable balance between population and possibilities to support oneself. This hypothesis is not credible either. The many victims must certainly have boosted mortality, but to give it any demographic importance, it would have more purposeful to sacrifice women than men. Posterity has not been able to come up with a credible explanation concerning human sacrifice.

What the gods certainly knew is the fact that animals descend from Man. Basic food for humans is different species of animals which affect human beings in different ways. Finally the individual's level of frequency is changed, into an animal frequency. Today's biologists call it DNA – genetic make-up. If you change the genetic make-up you also change the individual's level of frequency. The idea behind human sacrifice was to try to eat human flesh and drink human blood so animal humans could be reincarnated with human blood as human beings. This was particularly for the selected: rich people, kings, priests. So far nobody has managed to create an inverted process. More at the link "State Coats of Arms and Science". pp 14-16.

Darwin's theory of evolution in which the animals are the origins of Man. Behind the Indians' human sacrifices is the same idea. Did Darwin get the idea from them?

A progressive illustration of how an animal becomes human. This progression was also known by the Indians, although most of them were humans.

The Serpent God

This God has around 99 names and many irons in the fire. His motto is: "knowledge is power and vice versa". This God has demonstrated gigantic knowledge about for example life, astronomy, cosmology, universe, i.e. top-level science. His simple models of our galaxy are fantastic. He was reborn several times everywhere on this planet and every time he lived here, he left traces. This is a message without prayers. Life and culture with the Mayas, the Incas and the Aztecs were influenced by him. Pyramids as well as other types of buildings within architecture were almost directly influenced by him. In other words: the pyramid buildings were his style. When building for example pyramids the same levitation technology was used in the Americas as in Egypt. He was always surrounded by selected, loyal people who secretly worked for him. He always exists in the dark. He calls himself "Alpha&Omega" and is the most cunning of all Gods. But this God also has a positive and a negative side. The worst thing is when priests talk and act in the name of God without knowing anything about it. To commit crimes in God's name, lie and run the churches without God's church order is the worst thing that can happen in religion. These actions lower the reputation of God and most people turn their backs on him.

Cortes and Moctezuma II 1519

Hernán Cortés and Moctezuma II's encounter in 1519. Cortés has divided the Indians into two fractions. Some went over to him and worshipped him as the Saviour of Christians, while the other fraction called him Death. One thing is clear: Cortés levelled the Aztec empire with the ground and his victory cost several million human lives. To conquest the realm of the Indians was Cortés's own idea and wish. He died near Sevilla on 2 December, 1547. His missing remains were found in Hospital de Jesus in Mexico City in 1946. About Cortés's possible reincarnation, see below.

Nostradamus

In March 1556, one year after the prophecy was published, a comet could be seen every night during three months – to everybody's horror. The Tiber and the Arno flooded large countries. When the Tiber withdrew a strange, huge serpent could be spotted dead at the river bed. With a peculiar colour and shape, it was a symbol of Christianity's decline and destruction. According to Nostradamus the end will come for the Vatican. The prophecies of St Malachi contain the same view and result. According to him, only one pope remains, Petrus Romanus, "Peter the Roman".
